MAGGIE DICOSTANZO

Maggie DiCostanzo is a Director in Fennemore's Business & Finance Group. In her practice, she focuses on matters related to health care and intellectual property. For more than 20 years, she has focused her legal practice on representing physicians, hospitals, post-acute care facilities and other healthcare professionals, delivering health law advice and counseling, as well as representation in regulatory/compliance, administrative and professional liability matters. She has also advised on the purchase and sale of medical entities. Additionally, Maggie is a registered patent attorney with the U.S. Patent & Trademark Office, and she drafts licensing agreements and other intellectual property-related documents.

Maggie has written extensively and presented to physicians, nurses, post-acute care facilities, and other healthcare professionals and entities on a local, state, and national level about various health care-related topics, including reducing medical professional liability, HIPPA, compliance, telemedicine, and post-adverse event disclosure, as well as specialty-specific topics including obstetrics, orthopedics, and bariatric surgery. Her research and knowledge in the area of post-adverse event communication allowed her to assist the Pennsylvania Health Care Association in the drafting of Pennsylvania's Benevolent Gesture Liability Act, which permits healthcare professionals to express a "benevolent gesture" to patients and their families without the benevolent gesture being used against them in the courtroom to prove negligence.

Adding to her list of experience and accomplishments, Maggie has also served as an adjunct professor at Pennsylvania State University's York, Pennsylvania campus, providing education sessions for continuing education students in the areas of assisted living and personal care home facilities. In the spirit of giving back, she regularly volunteers as a juror for the Pennsylvania Bar Association's Mock Trial Program, and she has provided pro bono services to support Afghan asylum seekers and a local pardon project.
